WORKING WITH MEDIA + INFLUENCERS IN 2021

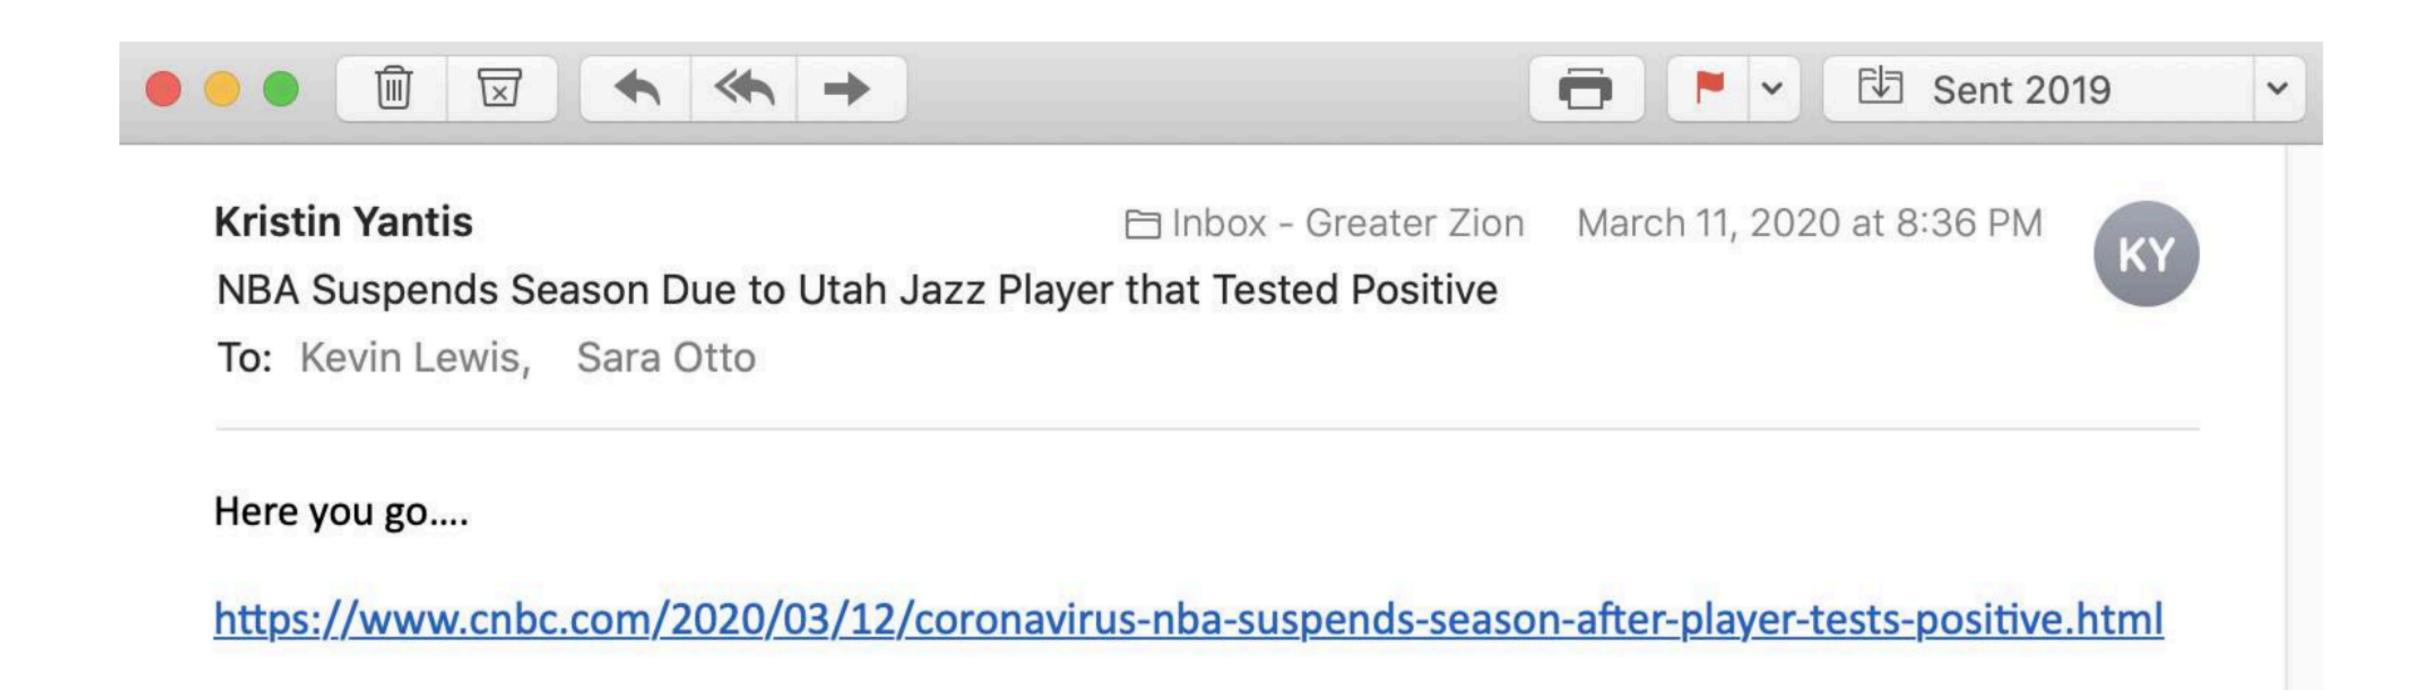

What We'll Cover

- COVID-19's Impact on Media
- 2021 Media + Influencer Program
- Maximizing the GZCTO PR Program
- Creating News

COVID-19's Impact on Media

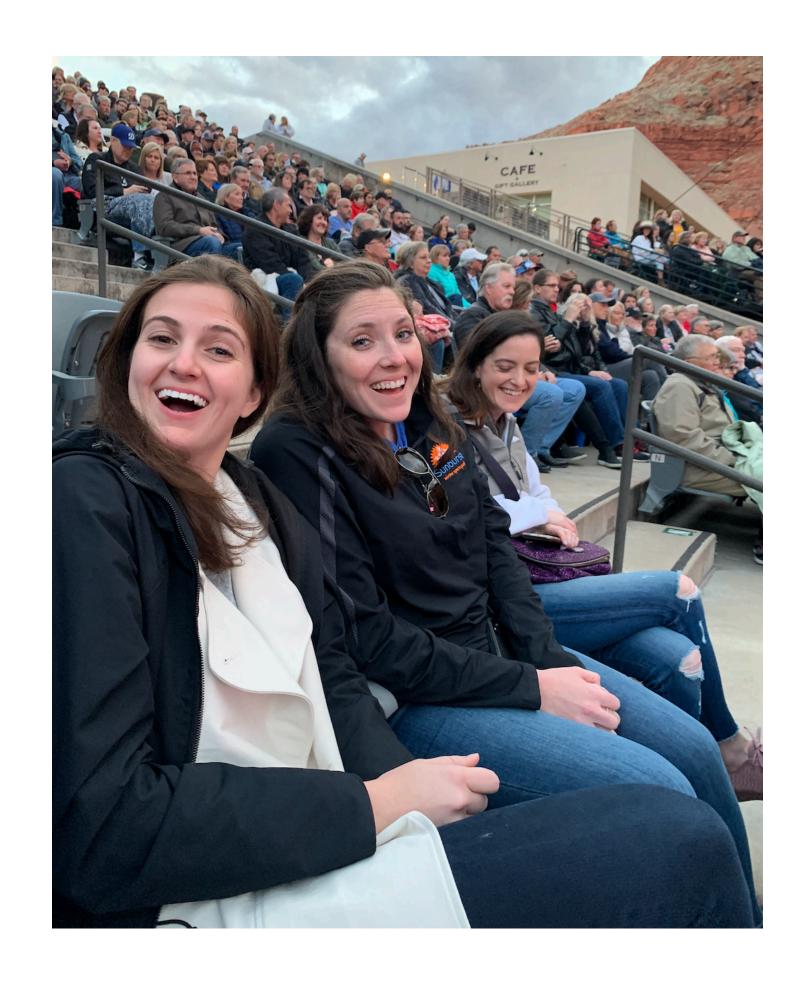

March 11, 2020

March 13-16, 2020

March 13-16, 2020

March 13-16, 2020

COVID's Impact on Publishing

The New York Times

News Media Outlets Have Been Ravaged by the Pandemic

Roughly 37,000 workers at news companies in the U.S. have been laid off, been furloughed or had their pay reduced. Some publications that rely on ads have shut down.

COVID's Impact on Travel Media

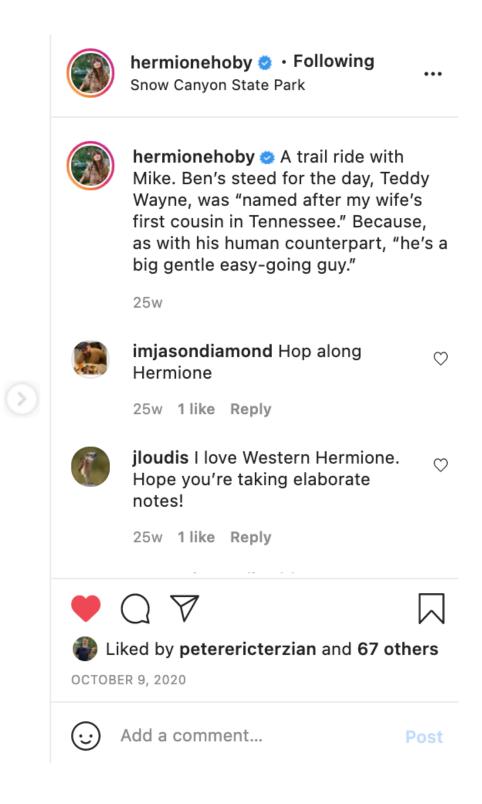

- Newspaper travel sections stopped covering travel or only cover regional travel, staycations, etc.
- Several lifestyle, travel and endemic publications cease publication
- Travel coverage shifted to online
- Using staff for stories versus freelance writers
- Everything goes virtual media visits stop…for a while

"Zion is still a go at this point, it's just on hold until Seattle Times leadership is ready to encourage people to travel...."

-Freelance writer Caitlyn Flynn

2020 Media Visits

2020 Influencer Visits

thatpinkjeepgirl · Following Greater Zion Utah

thatpinkjeepgirl Sorry.. have been on mute! Justin and I just bought a house, moved, working on our businesses, and packing for our trip out to UT. Hope to see our friends while we are there! 💗

#jeep #jeeplife #pinkjeep #jeepher #jeepgirl

misssarahbeth If you make it up to Salt Lake, the girls have a few runs planned the next couple of weeks! 💗

1,200 likes

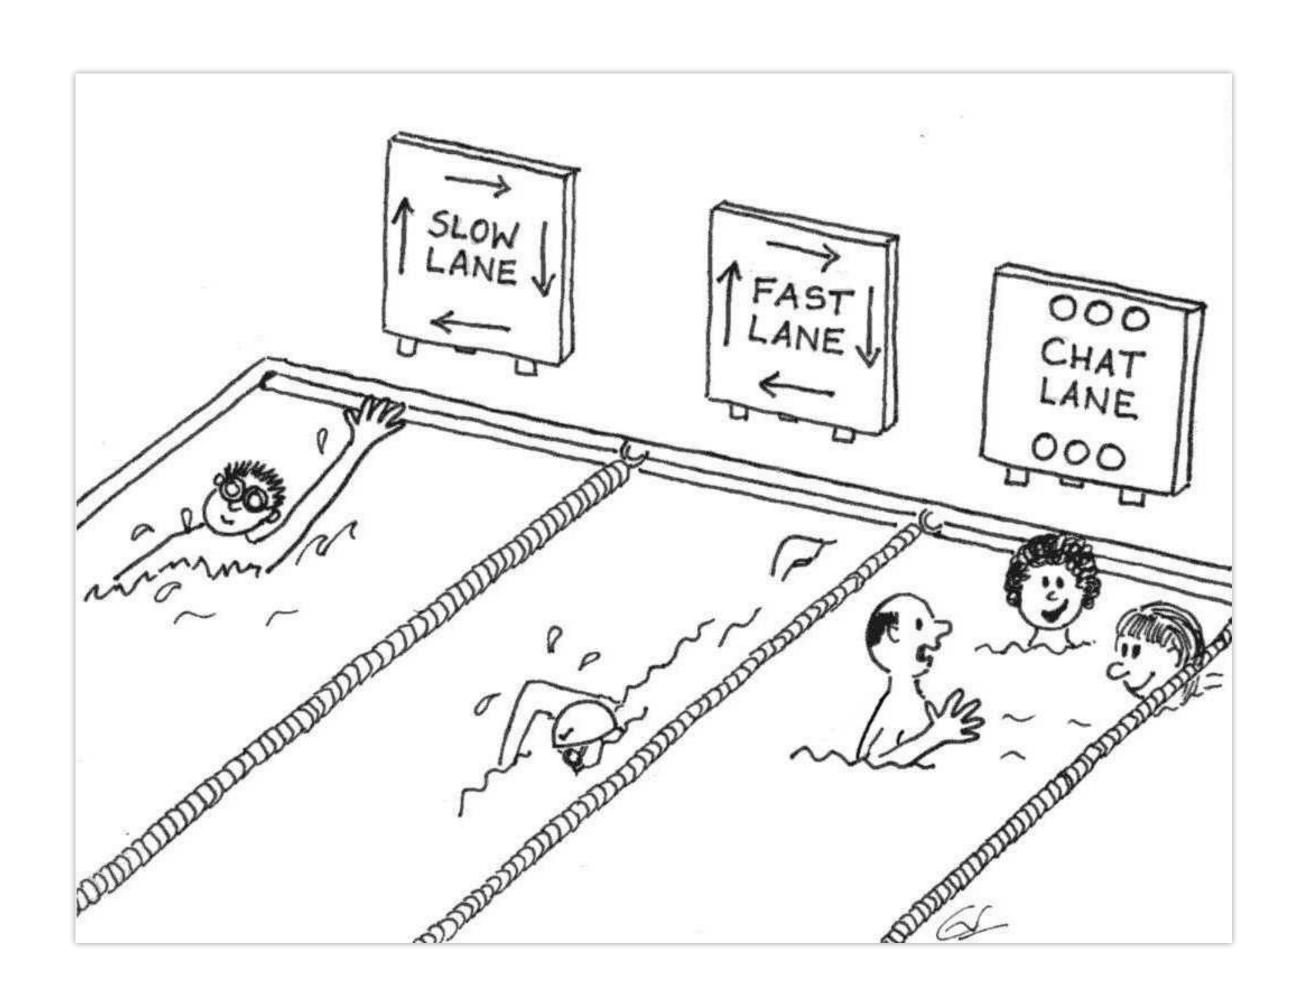

Add a comment...

SEPTEMBER 26, 2020

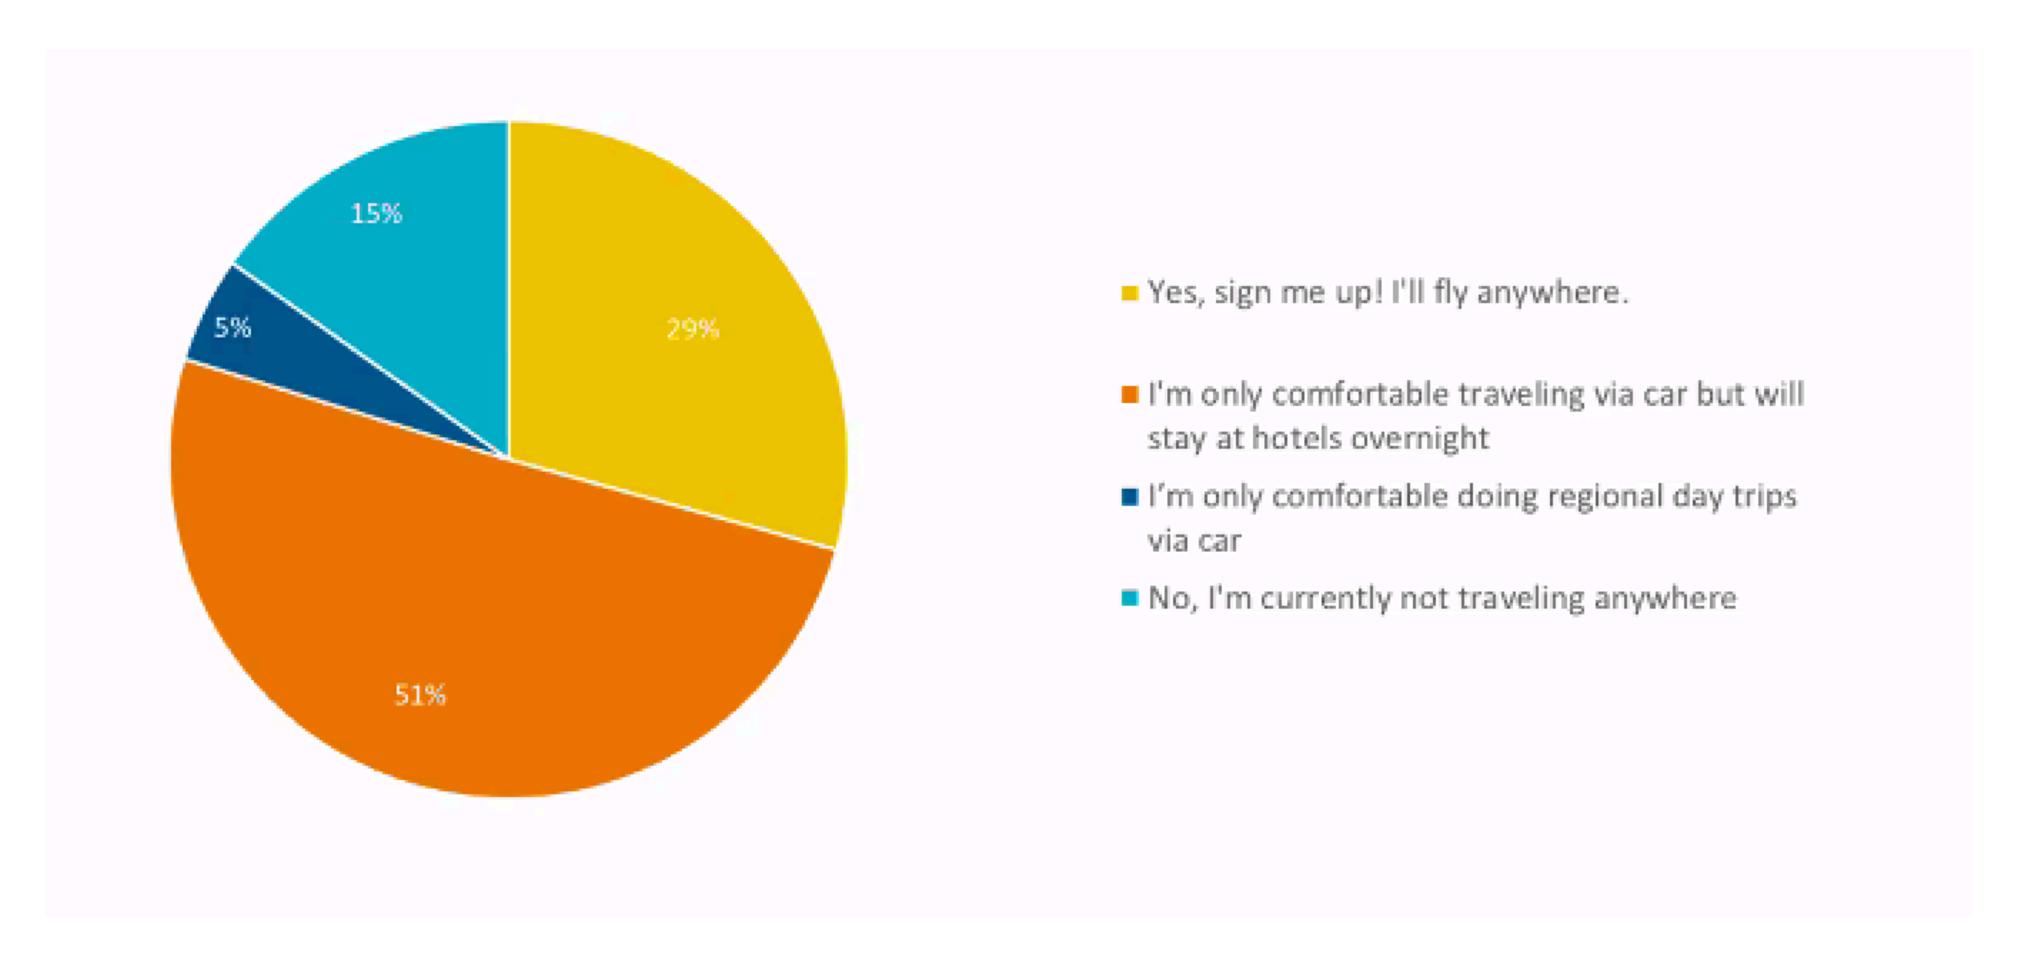

Post

2021 Media + Influencer Program

We Are All Moving at Different Speeds

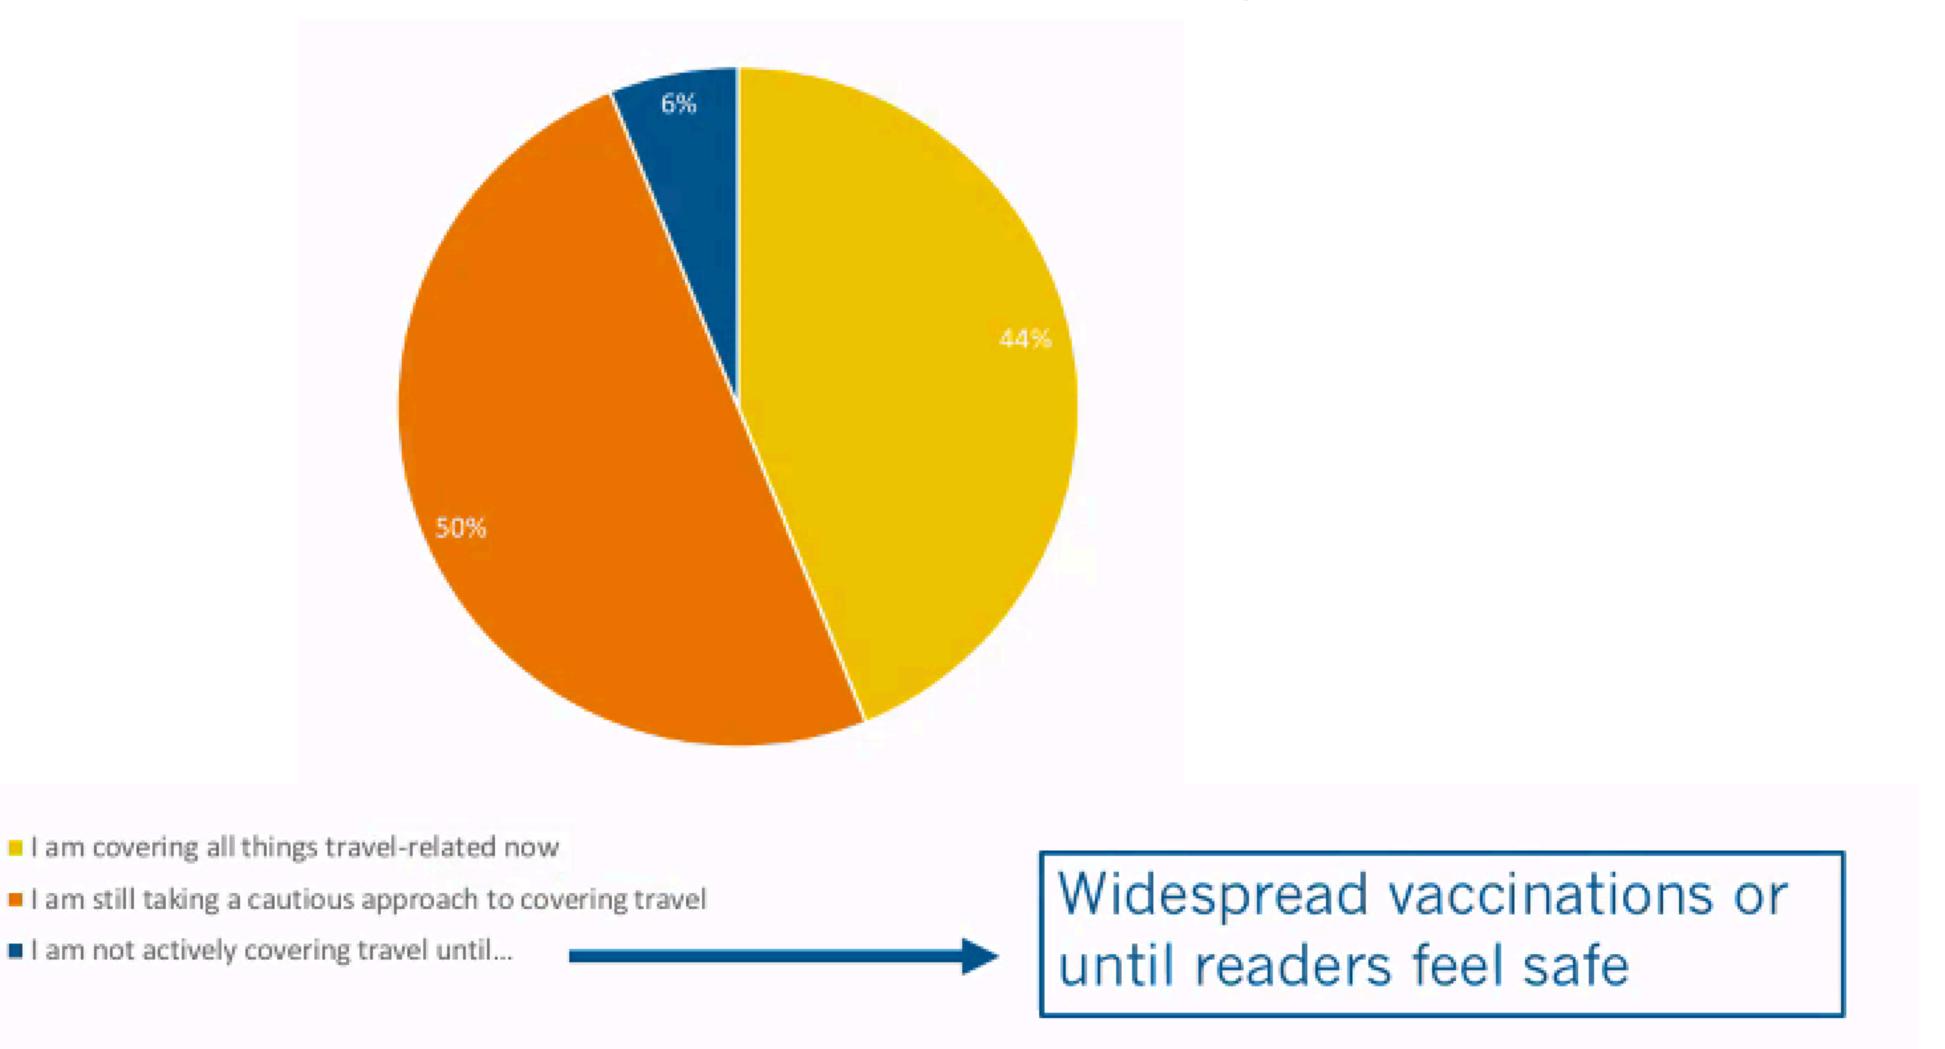

Media Thoughts on Domestic Travel

Source: Visit California media survey

Current Sentiment About Covering Domestic Travel

Source: Visit California media survey

Press Trip Modifications

- 80% favor individual press trips
- Approx. 45% no carpooling or ridesharing
- Nearly 60% primarily outdoor experiences
- 35% small group settings, socially distanced

Source: Visit California media survey

Top Travel Topics

No. 1 – Road Trips

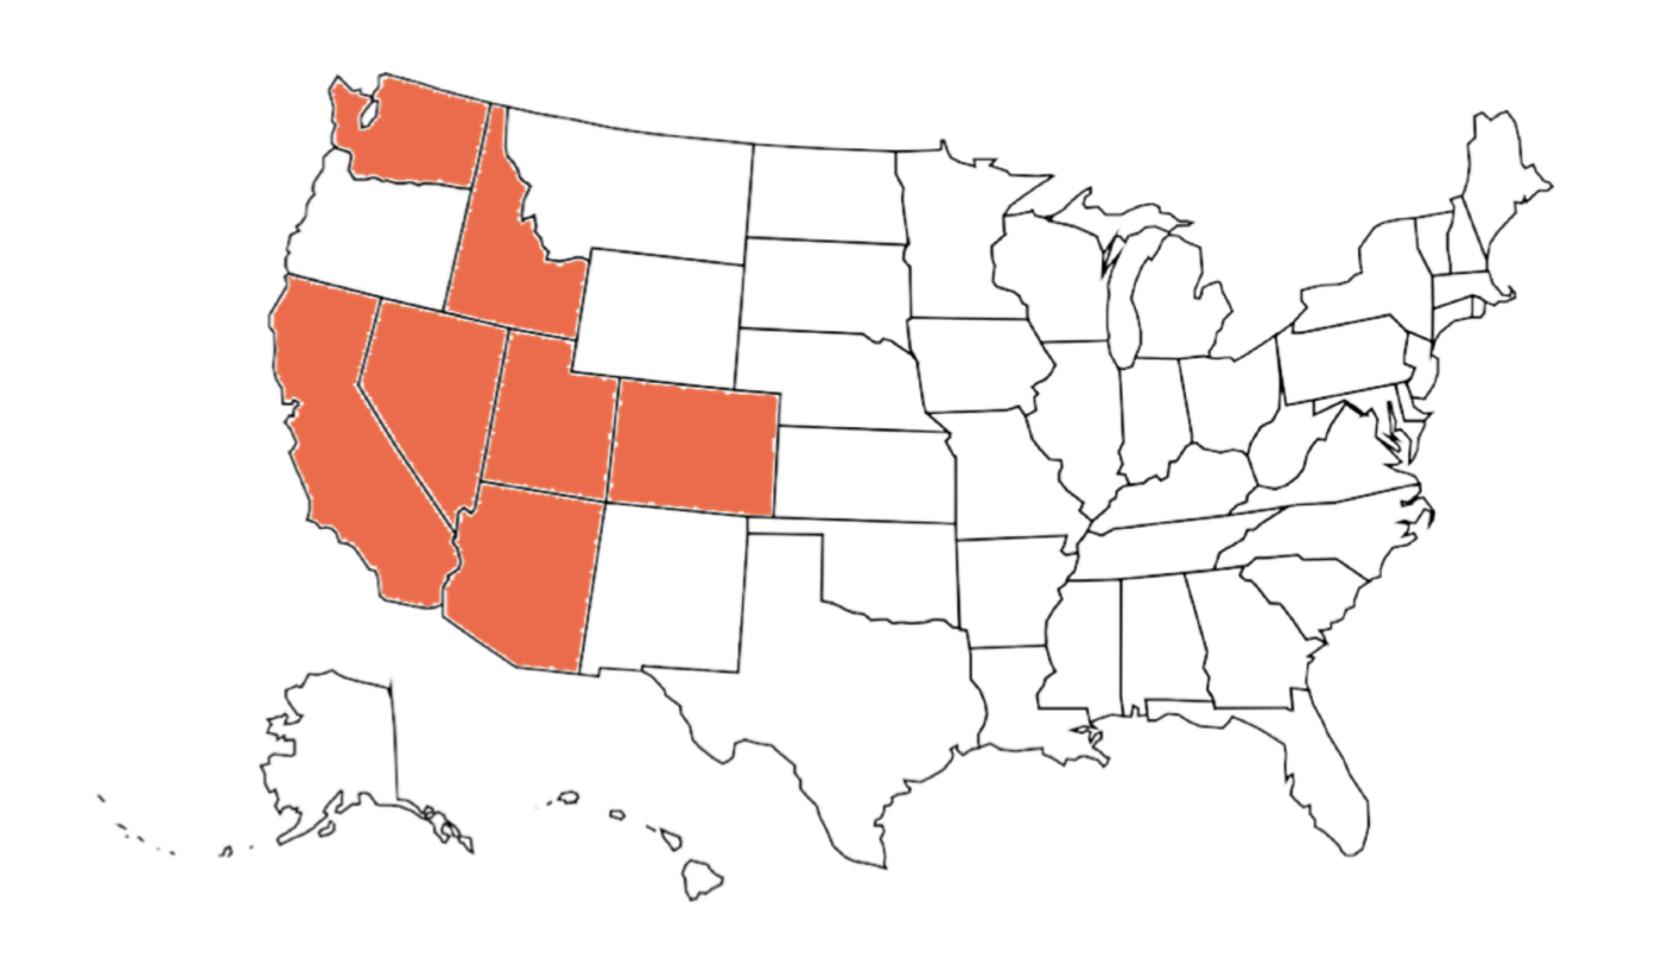

No. 2 – Wide Open Spaces

What this Means for You

- Greater Zion Primed for Success
- Media Insights Watch for content from MYPR.
- Different Speeds Media might not be comfortable with faster speeds. Clearly communicate current details for tours, masks, cleaning policies, safety protocols, etc.
- Help Them Feel Comfortable Share standards like remote check in, takeout, tour group size, option for driving separately, etc.

Target Markets

States:

- Arizona
- California
- Colorado
- Idaho
- Nevada
- Utah
- Washington

Greater Zion 2021 PR Effort

KEY MESSAGES

- Outside the Park
- Golf Greater Zion
- Top Mountain Biking Destination
- Expansive OHV Options
- Outdoor Adventure
- Where Competitive Athletes Train, Play + Compete
- Tourisms Economic Impact on the Community
- Timely, Newsworthy Content

TACTICS

- Proactive + Reactive Media Relations
- Quarterly Media Tip Sheet
- Satellite Media Tour
- Content Program
- Visiting Journalists Program
- Monitoring Media Placements

Greater Zion Influencer Program

2

Outdoor Adventure

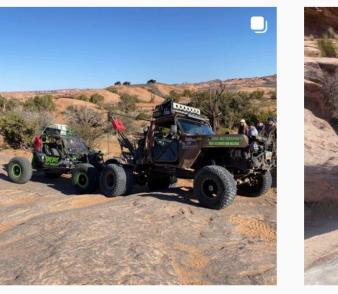

Mountain Bike

@alexborsuk

@beat_not_babied

@katieholden

5 Things Your Business Should Be Doing to Maximize the GZCTO PR Program

Partner to help organize the trip/ itinerary

Meet and engage with media/ influencers while they are in-market in-person and/or via social media

Respond to inquiries in a timely manner - driven by deadlines

Be a positive representative of the destination

Create news! Define + tell your story

How to Create News

What's Trending

- Return to travel how travel has changed after COVID-19
- Access to COVID testing
- Working/learning on the road
- Small hotel or floor buyouts "pod travel"
- Curated group travel
- Unique, socially distanced lodging
- Re-imagining events
- Outdoor adventures in wide open spaces

How to Create News

- Creative packaging and programming
 - · Creatively cater to mountain bikers (access to off limits/private areas, free shipping, overnight tuning)
 - Develop unique vacation packages
 - Programming that ties with trends
- Outfitters/Outdoor Adventures
 - Twist on the ordinary
 - Repackage already existing programs
- Other
 - Restaurant unique, regional cuisine
 - The Arts debuts, launches, first runs
 - Retail new stores, openings, etc. (first ever stores, unique drive thru experiences)
 - Events what's new, celebrity attendees, etc. (unique regional only celebrations, largest/biggest celebrations in the country.)

SHARE INFO!

Tell Us What You are Doing!

The Best Staycation in Every State

44 St. George, Utah

VIEW MAP 🕒

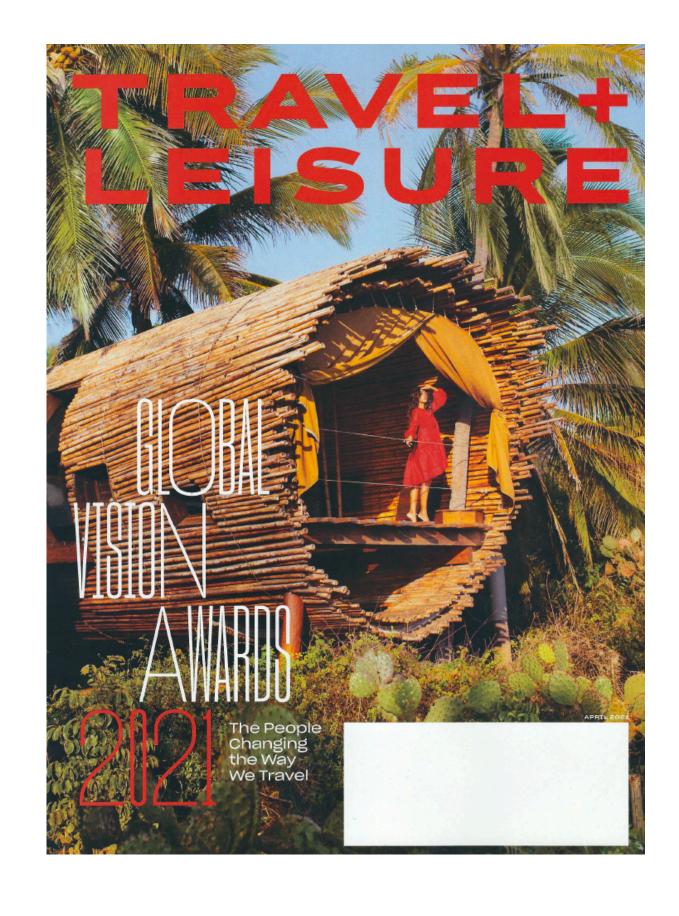

ADDRESS: St. George, UT, USA

WEB: Visit website

Mario Möller / EyeEm / Getty Images

Explore Southwestern Utah red rock wonders in St. George, a year-round adventure destination four hours from Salt Lake City. Best known as a Zion National Park gateway, find in-town desert adventures at quiet Snow Canyon State Park. Experience the park's secluded slot canyons, subterranean lava tubes, or petrified dunes on short, scenic hiking trails. Go mountain biking past endangered flowers on Bearclaw Poppy Trail and paddleboard on tranquil waters amid Navajo sandstone in Gunlock Reservoir State Park.

Channel pioneer vibes with a downtown stay at The Advenire, a boutique hotel home to Wood.Ash.Rye—conservative St. George's only craft cocktail bar. Fill up with takeout (or patio dining) from family-run Angelica's Mexican Grill, where authentic mulitas, cheese, veggie, and meat-loaded quesadillas, are served to order with housemade salsa. Reserve lauded ledge-side seating with panoramic city vistas at Cliffside Restaurant, a romantic eatery famous for its bold American cuisine. —Jenny Willden DRIVING WEST LAST OCTOBER through the stretch of southern Utah where the Mojave Desert, Great Basin, and Colorado Plateau collide, I found myself reflecting on the word greater. The name Greater Zion was coined in 2019 to encourage visitors to think beyond the spectacular yet relatively small Zion National Park, which is a mere 232 square miles, compared with, say, Yellowstone's 3,472. The new designation is an implicit reminder that Zion itself is just one chunk of beauty within an excess of staggering scenery. Following roads that wound through blazing canyons and valleys of russetcolored Navajo sandstone, I began to consider greater less as a geographical or marketing term and more as a superlative. Greater as in more beautiful, more awesome, more sublime than anywhere else.

Like so many places of natural wonder in the U.S., Greater Zion-a region of more than 2,400 square milessaw growing numbers of visitors amid the pandemic. "Folks were cooped up and confined and looking for places to get some mental freedom again," Kevin Lewis, the area's director of tourism, told me. "They're coming to have an open-space experience."

So was I. I was traveling with Ben, my boyfriend and comparably awestruck chauffeur, from our home in Boulder, Colorado, to Under Canvas Zion, one of a collection of nine campsites near national parks around the country that seek to make roughing it a bit more glam. From there we'd take in the region by foot, on horseback, and, most adventurously, by rope and ladder.

From a distance, Under Canvas Zion looked a little culty: an encampment of white tents dotted across a hillside, nestled in a craggy valley of red rock just beyond the western border of the national park. Up close, by the glow of fairy lights and the campfires around which happy kids toasted marshmallows, it was simply idyllic.

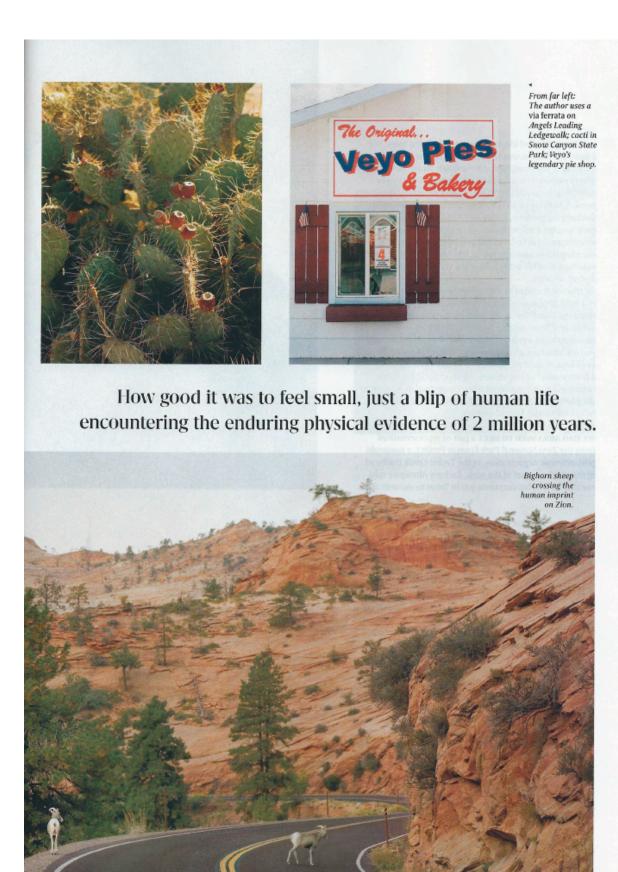

We found our tent snugly wedged between giant red boulders, looking out across the wide valley. Inside, I reveled in the pleasure of everything being just so. Two little USB-charged lanterns cast a sweet glimmer across the honey-colored canvas walls. There were two elegant chairs, a wood-burning stove, and, best of all, a vast and plush bed in which I would sleep outrageously well for the next four nights. That evening, before I fell asleep, I listened to spooky ululations, answered and echoing through the canyon. "Coyotes," confirmed Ben, who grew up on Colorado's Western Slope, rather than in suburban London like me. The West, suddenly, felt wild.

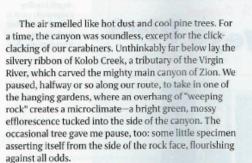

HAD I BEEN sleeping in a traditional tent, I would have been annoyed to wake before dawn. But here, it felt only delightful to creep out of bed and venture into a cool, dark, still faintly starry morning. After procuring coffee-mercifully, a help-yourself situation at Embers, the property's restaurant-I sat on our deck and watched the rocks flush apricot as the day broke.

Ben and I live in a place where hiking is more or less mandatory, so we were particularly excited to try something called a via ferrata, which, despite our outdoorsiness, neither of us had heard of before. The name, which is Italian, refers to cables that plot routes across rock faces. Giant steel staples cemented into the rock provide ladders. The pastime of climbing a via ferrata gained popularity in the Italian Alps in the 1930s, when routes originally used by troops during World War I were reclaimed for recreational purposes. This allowed people to experience the kind of vistas and vertiginous thrills usually available only to seasoned climbers.

We headed to the charming Kolob General Store-a small outpost on a high, wild road-where we met our guides, Cindy Alfaro and Jared Wright of the Utah Adventure Center. Both exuded a sense of profound calm, which was helpful, given that we were about to descend a thousand-foot rock face. They were taking us on a route called Angels Leading Ledgewalk, located on a private ranch that borders the park. I stepped into a complicatedlooking harness, which fell around my hips like some avant-garde skirt made by a club-kid designer. Then we piled into a buggy that bumped down a steep dirt road to where the route began. Alfaro and Wright demonstrated how, when we reached the "anchors" along the cable, we were to unclip and reclip one carabiner, then the next. In this way, they explained, we would always be safely attached to the cliffside.

Our route ended in a 100-foot vertical ascent that, in a mild fit of masochism, I resolved to climb without stopping. Breathless and triumphant at the top, I then followed Wright out to a terrifying overhang of rock where he encouraged me to lean back and let go. My mind said: you are attached and cannot fall. My body, speaking even louder, said: thousand-foot drop below. Emitting a bovine noise of trepidation, I leaned back, my heart hammering, and mustered the courage to glance down at the plummeting drop and see birds sweep below me. A brief look was all I could manage.

WE HAD ARRANGED TO MEET a pair of representatives from the Zion National Park Forever Project, a nonprofit philanthropic organization, at the Taylor Creek trailhead in the northern part of the park. Zachary Almaguer told me that he quit his corporate job in Texas to move to the

Witness baked goods

from $359. St. George Regional Airport, a 45-minute drive from Zion Where to Eat Oscar's Café National Park, is serviced Satisfyingly hearty Mexic food in lively Springdale-

River Rook Roasting

Company a great spot for a sundown beer and pizza, thanks to its lovely views of the Virgin River Gorge. riverrock canyon walls-whether a guest tent or from the

Embers-are spectacular

Snow Canyon Trail Rides Leisurely tours on horse-Just the thing for hungry back through Snow Canyo State Park, a landscape of hikers. oscarscafe.co. lava flows and petrified dunes. snowcanyontrail

the counter at this strawberry-rhubarb.

How to See It

kind of rock climbing for amateurs, utahadventure

Zion National Park Foreve come in classic flavors like

This nonprofit works closely with the park, classes in identifying birds and wildflowers, and Thursday treks with an rides.com.

Utah Adventure Center For those unafraid of heights-or wishing to conquer their fear with some magnificent and vertiginous views of Kolob zionpark.org. Travel Advisor

Dan Austin (406-671-6067; A-List of the world's best in American national aspect of a trip to the

The Best

Zion

of Greater

Getting There

American Airlines.

Where to Stay Under Canvas Zion

One of Under Canvas's

nine-and-counting glamp

national parks across the outfitted tents combine a temporary luxe aesthetic

from comfortable beds to high-end bath products.

country. Its handsomely

It's also culturally sensitive. The law that established the National Park Service in 1916 focused on preserving scenery and wildlife, giving no consideration to the Indigenous peoples who'd lived in the newly protected areas for millennia. Now, there is widespread acknowledgement of the right of Southern Paiutes to pray, make offerings, and gather plants in Zion (federal law otherwise prohibits removing anything from the parks).

zion National Park's original Southern Paiute name is Mukuntuweap, meaning "straight canyon," so called because the park follows the course of a straight line. The next morning, we were to see that straight canyon from one of the highest and best vantage points. We met Mark Wade, one half of Road Trippin' with Bob & Mark, a team of photo-bloggers with an intimate knowledge of the region.

"Some people," Wade told me, "say you get red sand in your shoes and you can never get it out." As he led us along the 3½-mile trail to Observation Point, he seemed to have an endless arsenal of stories about people dying there, which he told with remarkable equanimity. Most seemed to involve troops of ill-fated Boy Scouts.

We survived, reaching the end of the trail and the edge of the canyon around noon. Before me was the Great White Throne, a mountain of white Navajo sandstone rising more than 2,000 feet from the floor of the valley. Below was the vast main canyon of the park, through which wound the accurately named Scenic Drive. A haze over the scenery lent it all a painterly cast.

I reveled in the perspective-giving force of all this. How good it was to feel small, just a blip of human life encountering the enduring physical evidence of 2 million years. By the time we'd hiked back to the car, however, it felt like 2 million years had passed since breakfast. We drove to Springdale, a touristy town on the edge of the park, and descended on Oscar's Café, a cheap and cheerful Mexican restaurant where every huge dish came smothered with cheese—exactly what we needed.

Back at camp, we sat outside Embers in the dusk. A young man with a profusion of facial hair approached the mic with a guitar. As our cheerful troubadour made his way through Steve Miller Band's classic "The Joker," Ben expressed skepticism over whether anyone truly had called the song's author "the gangster of love."

The music was questionable, but who cared when there was an effulgent rising moon, cool desert air, a little red wine, and two very good Impossible Burgers to be had, each with a generous pile of hot fries? The crowd skewed young and SoCal-looking, well-groomed in their high-end athleisure. The next morning, as I ate chia pudding in the same spot, I was struck by the funny intimacy of seeing those same strangers shuffling about in pajama pants with unbrushed hair, groggy and in pursuit of coffee—a reminder that even though this whole setup was fancy enough to have chia pudding on the breakfast menu, we were still camping.

BY THIS POINT I'd lost count of the number of people who'd told us, with unabashed local pride, that if it were anywhere else, Snow Canyon would be a national park. The state park, situated 50 miles or so west of Zion, counteracts the vertical drama of its more famous neighbor with the horizontal sweep of lava flows and petrified dunes.

Turning off the highway a little later that morning, we saw, shimmering slightly in the haze and looking stirringly filmic, a big silver trailer beside which four horses stood quietly with bowed heads. Ennio Morricone began to play in my head, growing only louder when we met Michael Reed of Snow Canyon Trail Rides. Tanned and lean in blue Wranglers and a battered, wide-brimmed hat, Reed told us he couldn't even remember the first time he rode a horse. He finished up some Pringles, tossed the can back in his truck, and introduced us to our steeds. They included Teddy Wayne, "named after my wife's cousin in Tennessee," Reed said, because, like the cousin, "he's a big, gentle, easygoing guy."

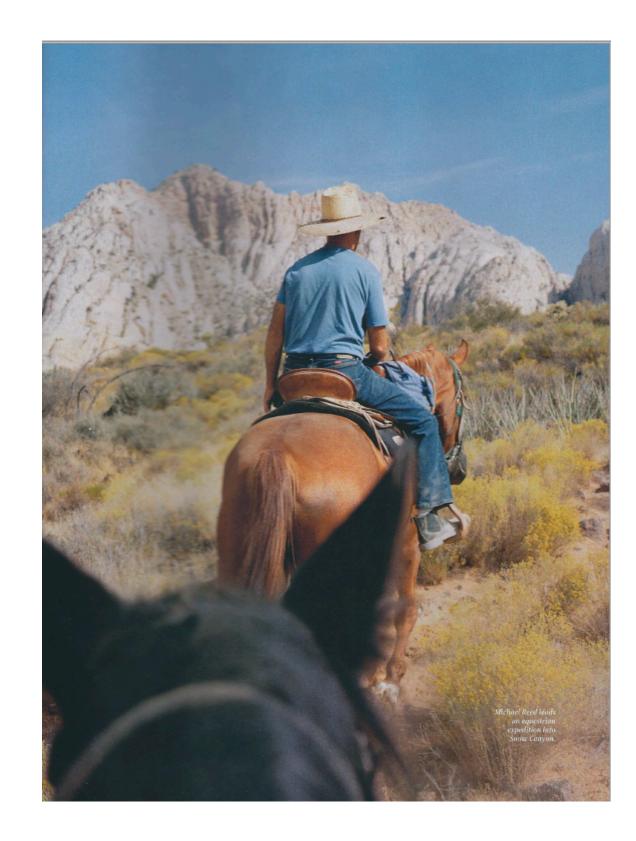

The description seemed to fit all of the animals, which made their leisurely way through the landscape—all 7,400 acres of it, a kind of excess of magnificence. The soft greens of yucca and cholla cactus seemed to glow, quietly luminous, against this backdrop of ancient burnt-umber rock as Reed kept up a gentle patter about the flora, breaking only to coo to one of the horses.

We drove on to Veyo, where we found Veyo Pies, in business for 30 years and counting. In the kitchen behind the counter, glossy cherry filling was being coaxed into a waiting crust. Cherry is what we ordered, along with a big Styrofoam cup of black coffee. Outside in the hot sun, we found a picnic table and ate our slices with plastic forks. Yes, that was some good pie.

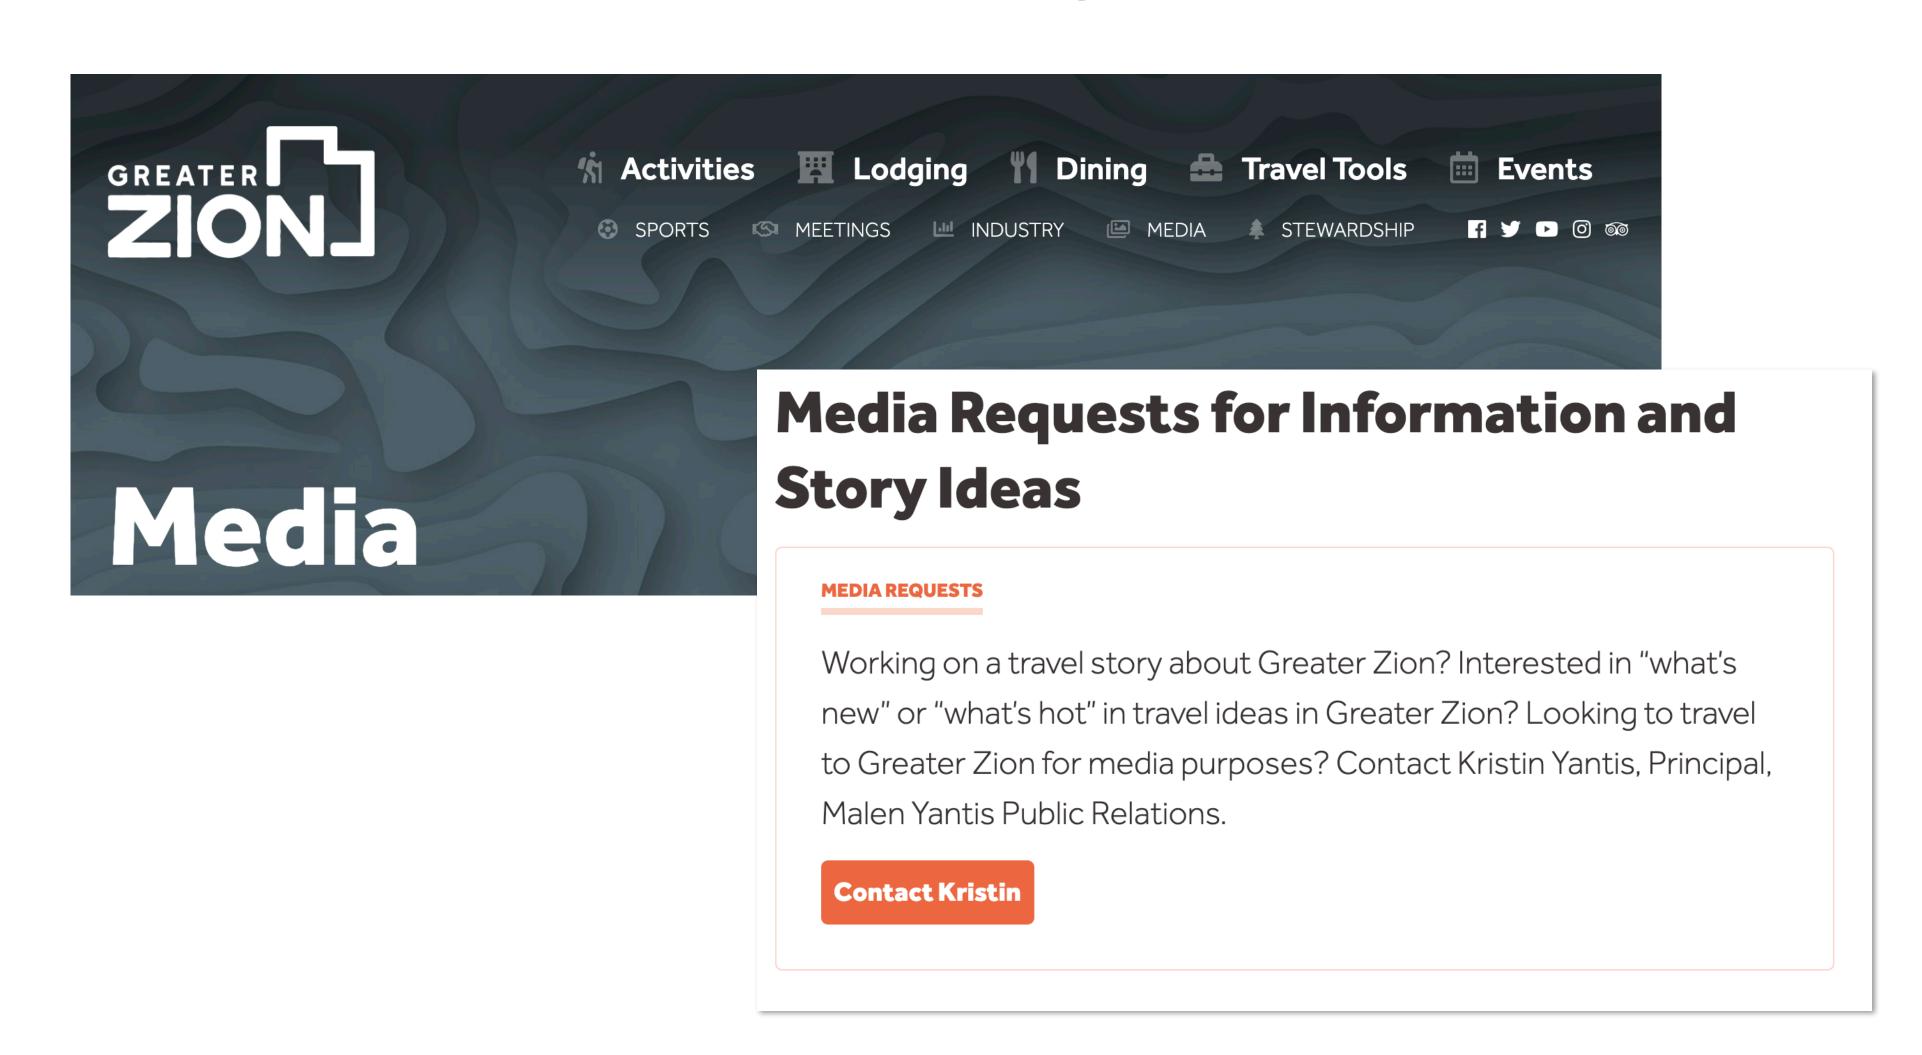

The next morning, we headed to the Water Canyon trailhead, just outside Hildale, a little north of the Arizona border. As we stepped out of the car, the air was clear, the sky was blue, and the world felt pure. We followed a trail, indicated by strips of pink fabric fluttering from branches, up the ravine of the slot canyon, scrambling and wading through cascades and pools overshadowed by mossy boulders—a route so picturesque that we felt like we were in a franchise of fantasy movies, a pair of questing hobbits.

I was some way ahead when Ben called out. I turned around and saw him standing where the narrowing rock formed a sort of slot-canyon-within-a-slot-canyon, straddling the chasm, silhouetted against the mid-morning glare. "Take a picture!" he suggested happily, but I was already reaching for my phone. ◆

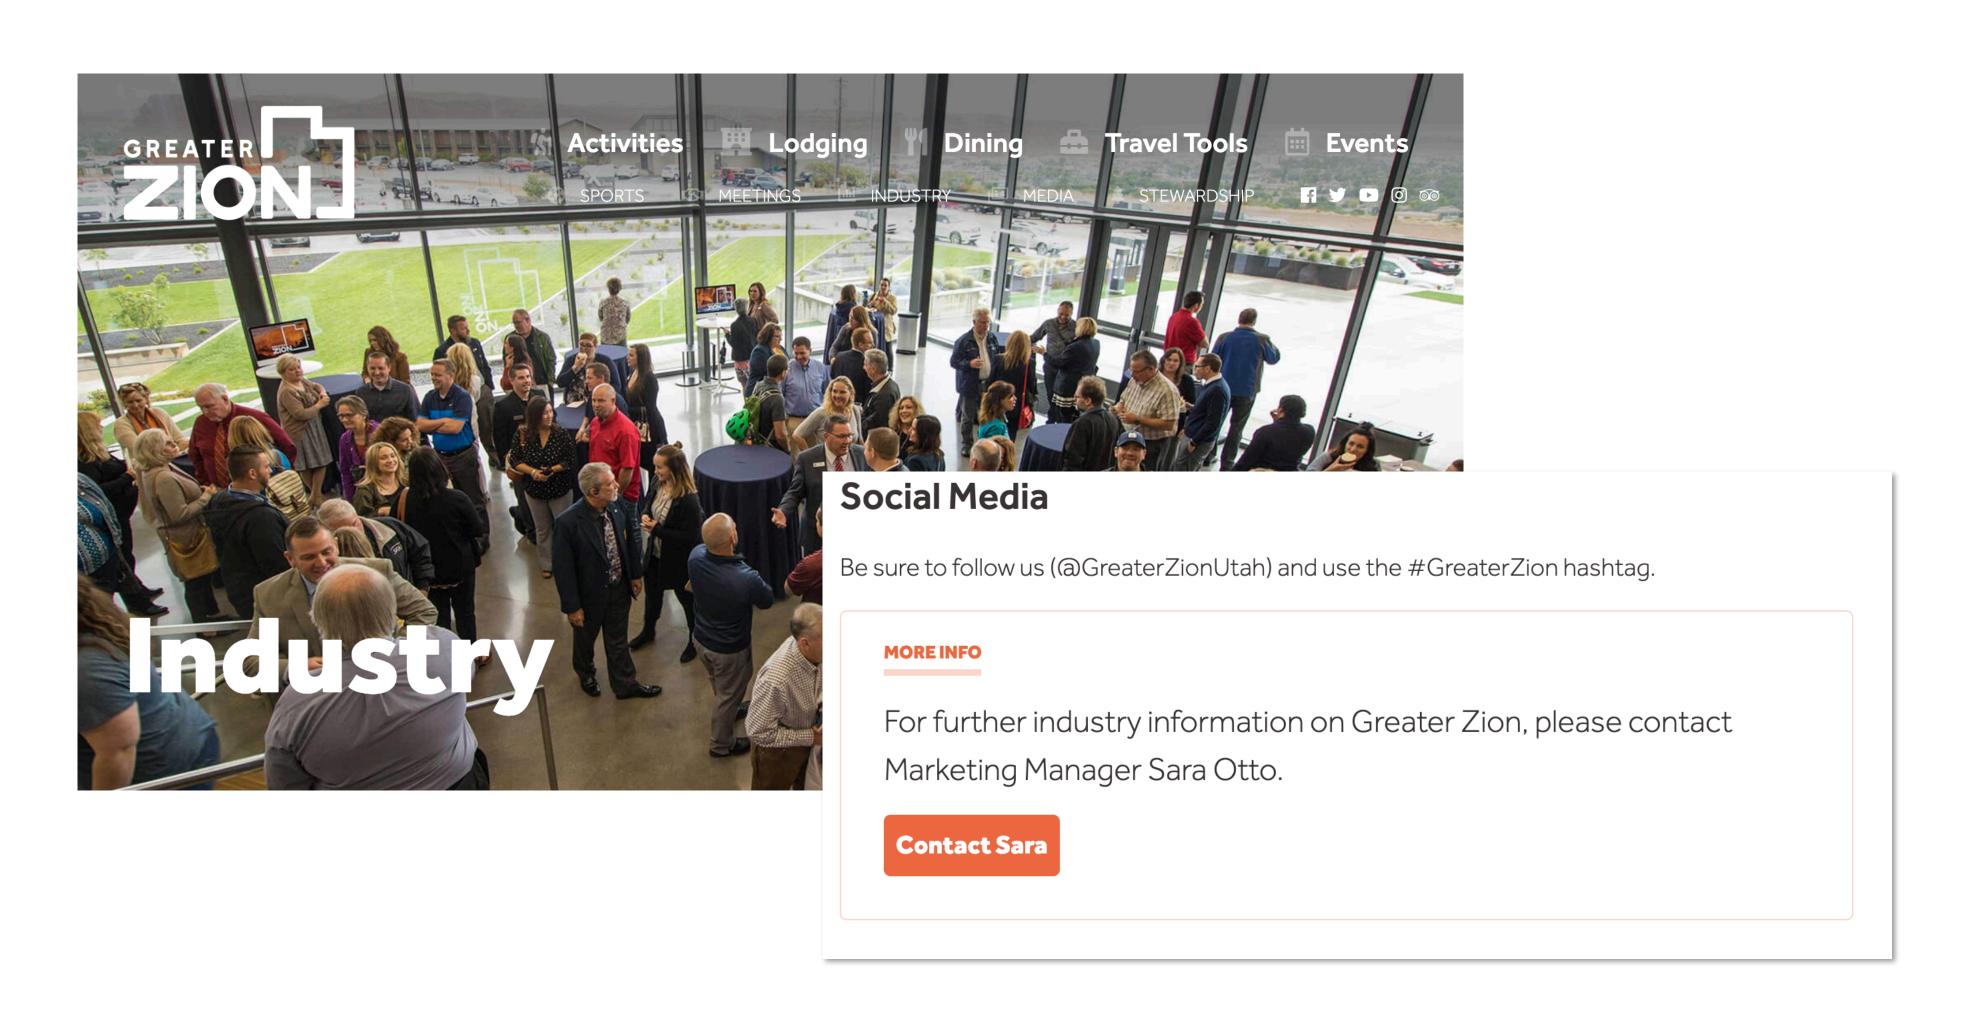

74 TRAVEL+LEIBURE | APRIL :

Greater Zion Media Page

Greater Zion Industry Page

Thank You!

IMMEDIATE

When COVID-19 gripped the nation, our PR strategy quickly adapted and we shifted our approach to media pitching and FAMs to the state. We began by telling the story of Utah's hospitality industry, spotlighting people and places helping others through this challenging time and sharing virtual wanderlust and Utah-from-home travel inspiration.

NEWS

How restaurants are reinventing themselves during the pandemic

____ Travel ____

Need to Get Outside? These 5 National Parks Offer Virtual Tours You Can Take From the Comfort of Home

Bryce Canyon National Park, Utah

Jeremy Duguid Photography/Getty Images

The beautiful, red and orange hoodoos of this famous desert landscape are now on full display, even if you're in your living room. This virtual tour centered on Sunset Point lets you enjoy the star-filled night sky from this Dark Sky certified national park, get up close and personal with the park's unique rock formations, and even take a horseback ride through the canyon from the comfort of your own home.

DAILYBEAST

"RENAISSANCE"

As the travel world began to open again, we began conversations with key freelancers and journalist, sharing story angles focused on renewal & recovery, wide-open spaces -- and, we focused on those "ready to hit the road."

$\mathsf{TRAVEL}\, {\textcircled{\tiny }}$

Escape the West Coast With This Utah Road Trip

Alexandra Cheney took the Land Rover Defender 110 X on an epic road trip through Utah

1 0 9

Road trip in Utah

From serpentine sandstone canyons to scraggy hoodoos, Utah is a geologic marvel. Molded over millennia, three wildly different physiographic provinces converge near the state's center: the Colorado Plateau, Middle Rocky Mountains, and Basin and Range. Each features a staggering yet specific array of landscapes as of the mountains.' Weaving along the Virgin River and through the multitude of evidenced throughout the Beehive State's five national parks. It's best experienced via the open road; the unrushed cadence of automobile travel allows for scenic stops and flexible days. In the winter, that could mean a bluebird morning on the slopes or a day spent in the snow-covered desert. During the warmer months, it unlocks balmy evenings filled with stargazing and Milky Way spotting.

The name Utah originates from the Native American Ute tribe; it means 'people mesas excites, but the adventure truly begins when tires meet with dirt, snow or gravel. Slide into the immeasurably capable 2021 Land Rover Defender 110 X and begin the journey in Utah's southwest at Zion National Park.

by Alexandra Cheney

As the state's first designated national park, Zion brims with Navajo sandstone, ranging in reds from a saturated carmine to a crisp vermilion, all the while punctuated by juniper and pine cliffs. Although a robust shuttle system services the park, drive in before sunrise or at twilight, when the 54-mile Zion Canyon Scenic Drive is most illuminated. While a set of stratified rock formations called the Watchmen is easily viewable from one of the many turnoffs, opt for the mile-long Canyon Overlook Trail hike, which terminates with a monumental vista of some of Zion's most celebrated

Head out of the park and into neighboring Springdale to FeelLove Coffee (feellovecoffee.com) for freshly baked donuts or avocado toast, which pair brilliantly with their signature tea elixirs or lattes. Stroll down Zion Park Boulevard, the main artery dotted with gem shops and galleries. Tribal Arts Zion (tribalartszion. com) sells Native American jewelry, pottery, baskets and sculptures crafted by the Hopi, Navajo and Kewa tribes, to name a few. The bespectacled namesake proprietor at David J. West Gallery (davidjwest.com) hopes to "encourage others to protect what natural lands we have left" through his photography, regaling customers with behind-the-scenes stories and helpful local tips. Dinner at Zion Canyon Brew Pub (zionbrewery.com/the-brew-pub) allows plenty of time to absorb the rustic, modest charm of Zion Wildflower Resort (zionwildflower.com). Each bungalow proffers uninterrupted views of Cougar

Mountain or Kolob Canyons from a private deck outfitted with rocking chairs and Straddling the southern Utah/Arizona border, Amangiri (aman.com) and the freshly launched tented pavilions of Camp Sarika, which translates to 'open space' in Sanskrit, continue to exemplify luxury. Tucked within the mesas of the high desert and gently undulating landscape, the 600 acres of wilderness dramatically seduce. On property, experience the Via Ferrata, a harness-required hike available exclusively to hotel guests, then unwind with a Hózhó healing treatment at the Aman spa. Watch the sun set over the sea of Coral Pink Sand Dunes and give sandboarding a try with Coral Pink ATV Tours (coralpinkatvtours.com) before retiring to a private fire pit and plunge pool at camp.

ESCALANTE

A three-hour drive east through Bryce Canyon National Park (which is not a canyon but rather an assemblage of natural amphitheaters) grants a midday check-in at Escalante Yurts (escalanteyurts.com) Originating in Central Asia, these round tents stay cool in the summer and warm in the winter. Prepare to be awestruck navigating S-turns and hairpins to Upper Calf Creek Falls Trail. The tree line melts away as the two-lane road follows the ridgeline, revealing stunning panoramas. Scramble down the slickrock (which, contrary to its name, is not slick unless wet) and into the forested, cool canopy that leads to a dramatic set of waterfalls. Cairns lead the way. Escalante's a sleepy town, so plan for an early supper at 4th West Pub, (4wpub.com) the local watering hole owned by Erin and David

Treanor. A mélange of street tacos, in-house smoked craft salsa, nachos and an ample number of paninis grace the menu. Water governs everything when it comes to slot canyons. Named for their narrow widths, slot canyons zig and zag, sometimes squeezing down to a sliver. The hard-packed dirt trail provides playful fodder for the Defender en route to a trio of slot canyon hikes, Dry Fork Narrows, Peekaboo and Spooky Slot Canyons. Be mindful of the hourly forecast; flash floods and afternoon rainstorms occur and must be dutifully considered. Back in town, Escalante Outfitters (escalanteoutfitters.com) doubles as a general store and restaurant. Consider their house-made pizzas and carrot cake welcome rewards after a day snaking through the slots.

2020 COVERAGE RECAP (state-wide)

Generated 79 total print / online and social impressions

Coverage included 16 print placements

57 online placements

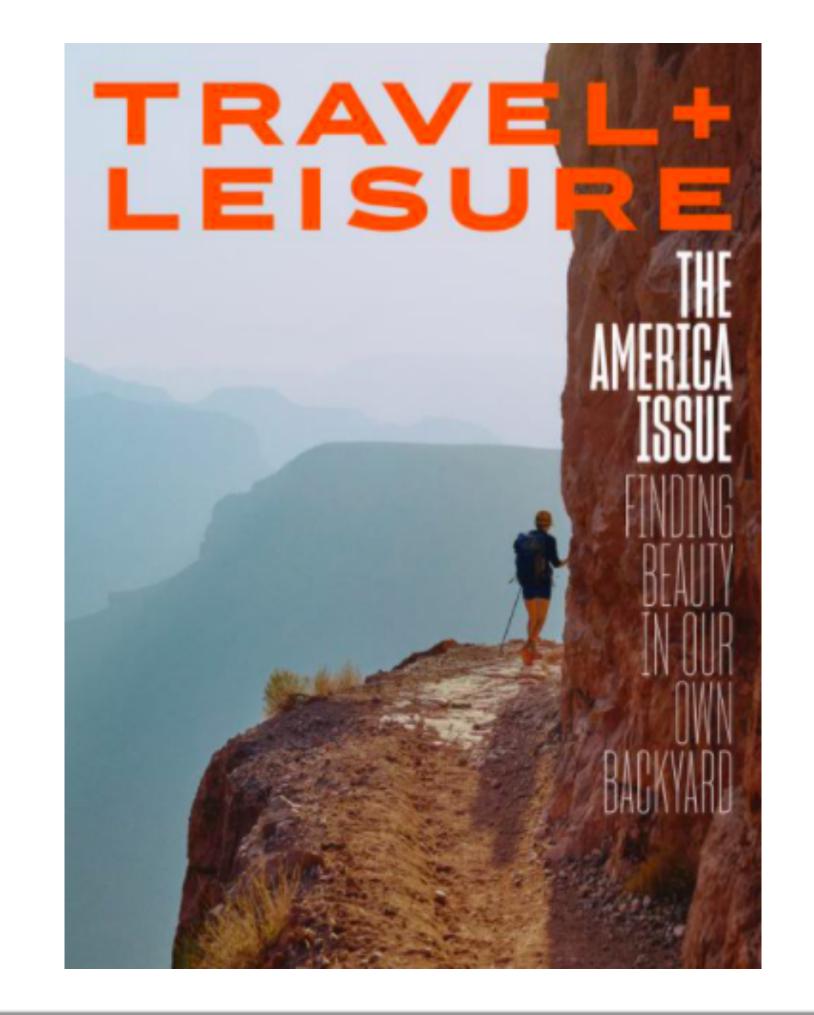

100% of all coverage was in a KPI outlet in key regional and national publications and media outlets

Taveler	Forbes	TODAY
AmericanWay	TRAVEL+ LEISURE	Chriffs:
ESSENCE	COOL HUNTING°	DEPARTURES

PR Tactics - 2021

- Trends First: the great outdoors, solo experiences, family matters, hit the road, no-touch wellness and healing power of nature, guided and experiential travel, plus so much more!
- KPI Messaging Focus & Key Storylines Laddering up to Strategy Initiatives (Red Emerald, Forever Mighty, SheTravels, etc.)
- In-person media hosting for first-hand experiences in Southern Utah (IMVs & FAMS): The Red Rock Retreat, Family Roadtrip, Ultimate Utah Guided Experiences, The Best State Parks in America, Gone Glamping, etc

SAMPLE MEDIA TARGETS

DEPARTURES

Key Storylines - 2021

Red Emerald Visitation:

Longer stays, support local. Embrace the destination.

Guided Experiences:

Understand the land via local experts.

Off the Beaten Path / Wellness in Utah:

Find wellness & healing in nature.

Opt Outside & Opt into Adventure:

Utah's an adventurer's paradise.

The Great American Road Trip:

"Mother Nature played favorites here in Utah."

St. George, Utah

TRAVEL+ LEISURE

CREDIT: GETTY IMAGES

St. George is the largest city in Greater Zion in Utah's southwest corner. March temperatures are ideal for outdoor activities, and you'll be ahead of summer's hot weather and crowds. While nearby Zion National Park will be on your list of places to see, you'll also want to include several of Utah's less visited parks, like Capitol Reef and Canyonlands, as well as state parks, if your time allows. With St. George as a convenient home base, your itinerary can include the ghost town of Leeds, once a booming silver mining town. Hike or bike the Red Cliffs Desert Reserve for scenery and a variety of wildlife. The International Dark Sky Association has certified at least 18 Utah locations for great stargazing. Relax among red rock canyons at the Red Mountain Resort, and enjoy a treatment at the Sagestone Spa and Salon. Or stay in the heart of St. George at the Advenire Hotel, a luxurious boutique in a convenient location. In Springdale, the recently renovated Cliffrose Springdale is a half mile from the Zion Visitor Center.

SAMPLE MEDIA TARGETS

GO WITH A GUIDE MOUNTAIN BIKING GOOSEBERRY MESA

UOT Content & Creative Programs

Director: Andrew Gillman

Public Relations
 Anna Loughridge

Social Media
 Melissa Kinney

- Editorial (Video and Photography)

 Sandra Salvas
- Editorial (Articles)

 Rosie Serago
- Website

 Rosie Serago

